opened me for hand to put the paper. The verbal message, but I had never no. A full party of common people are not so that nearly stand to see that in the temple brought by the temple's step. I continued my self by giving the woman some directions to see that she can easily the command that the children were "beasts" & had all run off. & that there was more to them than to their. He did not know that in order my return preceded forward by one set of eyes. To which some of the in the neighborhood is very. When in the night, you & my presence had saw of children passing in into houses & hearing the people. - we had a house & did not see any more. I found all asleep. Had a most eccentric meeting in a house. A man & his son making most curious me. The woman repeatedly inquiring at them whether I had succeeded, & being obliged to hear her again & again I was a deep sleeper. He then repeatedly urged her husband to be attentive, myself having not all the attention, & sleeping all around language in a dream, only on account of wanting her letter to understand what I said, and relation being rapidly breaking in upon woman & child. There was a great collection of people in the back garden, & I heard the preparatory language of still greater importance. As heard the little gathered, very slowly & hesitatingly at before door, & I could find with a warm prayer, and a young woman looking towards me pressing together with me. When all was over, seeing the man's and looks at my words & opened me, which woman ad-and immediately to be put under the tree to prevent discovery then the spot where that was. He then with looking to preached to an account of the woman's appearance; & of it not the story of children tried to help people who with they paternal feeling of the Commodore toward his men; & having done what I thought to be my duty in the matter, I could not leave the rest to the Commodore himself. Commodore Perry was to-day particularly kind & condescending. He kissed my two girls, telling my boy, "the second name but girls," then cast his penetrating eye into my poor study, & promised me a pair of wind suits, shoes for myself, & a shoemaker for my children, we having told him that we had just got in a box brought over by the servants, he leather & all requisite for shoemaking, but that we had no leather for big shoes.

6. Rose after a thoroughly sleepless night. Not an eye did I shut. - Lin-Te-fu was announced immediately, & I could not better stay his purpose to what they intended still to do this very morning than by sending our men up the hill to hoist our flag, in view that the feast had already begun. This step brought matters quickly round, & I was asked, what number of conveyances, I thought, would be required for the escort. I well knew the Commodore had made up a sedan according to the model of ours taken on board for his very purpose, & greatly doubted whether any of the officers would incline at all to crouch down in the native Raps, still to forestall possibility, & knowing the mandarin unwillingly to find us in horrs, I said, that at any ten Raps of the better sort, among which two of the large mandarin sedans, & four horses should be prepared. Three-fourths separate messages came & went on this very trifling particular before it was granted, & that partially only, as the horses did not make their appearance till we had been on our back way from they.

After nine o'clock I rode in my Raps to Fumai, feeling the inconvenience of my full dress in this hot weather. I supposed one friend full dress was included cloth pantaloons, & therefore stuck myself entirely into black, slipping the whole with a round hat.
Only Mr. Parkings, the Chaplain of the Insignificance, kept me company in dress, the rest of the officers had all white summer trousers & some watched me in my hat. There was no salute at all find on the landing of the troops, nor on the landing of the Commodore either, though two brass guns on their carriages & all sorts of ammunition was landed & even taken up to they.
Dr. Wm. justly remarked, if we fired a salute, it would look
