

Contributors

Kozue Akibayashi

Kozue Akibayashi, Ed. is a professor in the Graduate School of Global Studies, Doshisha University. She obtained her doctoral degree from Teachers College Columbia University. Her research interests are on feminist analysis of peace and security, militarism and demilitarization, and feminist peace movements/learning. She has conducted action research on Okinawa Women Act Against Military Violence and has been working in solidarity with them for over two decades. She has been active in global feminist peace movements and organizations, including the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the oldest international women's peace organization, of which she served as the international president (2015–2018), and the International Women's Network Against Militarism, or Women Cross DMZ/Korea Peace Now! for peace on the Korean Peninsula. Her recent publications are: "Cold War Shadows of Japan's Imperial Legacies for Women in East Asia" in Positions 28, no. 3 (2020): 659–675, and "Okinawa Women Act Against Military Violence: An Island Feminism Reclaiming Dignity" in Okinawa Journal of Island Studies, no. 1 (2020): 37–54.

Ömer Aydan

Ömer Aydan is a professor emeritus of the University of the Ryukyus. He studied mining engineering at the Technical University of Istanbul (1979), rock mechanics and excavation engineering at the University of Newcastle upon Tyne (1982), and received a PhD in geotechnical engineering from Nagoya University (1989). He has played an active role on numerous committees for ISRM (International Society for Rock Mechanics and rock engineering), JSCE (Japan Society of Civil Engineering), JGS (Japan Geotechnical Society), and rock mechanics national group of Japan, and he has organized several national and international symposia and conferences. He was made honorary professor in earth science by Pamukkale University in 2008 and received the 2005 Technology Award, the 2012 Frontier Award, and the 2015 Best Award from the Japan national group for rock mechanics.

Juan Jose Castro

Juan Jose Castro, professor of architecture and building engineering at the University of the Ryukyus, received his degree in civil engineering from the National University of San Juan, Argentina, and his MS and PhD from the University of Tsukuba, Ibaraki, Japan. He is a member and current chairman of the Okinawa branch of the Kyushu Chapter of the Architectural Institute of Japan. His research activities are in the fields of urban disaster mitigation and structural analysis of buildings against strong winds and earthquakes.

Crystal Amiel M. Estrada

Dr. Crystal Amiel M. Estrada is an associate professor in the Department of Environmental and Occupational Health, College of Public Health, University of the Philippines Manila. Dr. Estrada graduated with a Bachelor of Science in Public Health and a Master of Public Health from the College of Public Health, University of the Philippines Manila. She completed her Doctor of Philosophy in Health Sciences and also received the University President's Award at the University of the Ryukyus in Okinawa, Japan. After obtaining her undergraduate degree, she served as a research assistant in a five-year research program, "Prevention and Control of Leptospirosis in the Philippines (LEPCON)," a research collaboration of the Department of Medical Microbiology, College of Public Health, University of the Philippines Manila, the Department of Science and Technology Philippine Council for Health Research and Development (DOST PCHRD), and the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA). Dr. Estrada has attended local and international conferences, seminars, and workshops on public health, global health, school health, and mental health. Her research engagements and interests are in communicable diseases (leptospirosis and COVID-19), school health, occupational health, and mental health. She has published several journal articles in local and international peer-reviewed and indexed journals.

Contributors

Ayano Ginoza

Ayano Ginoza is an associate professor with the Research Institute for Islands and Sustainability at the University of the Ryukyus. Her research mainly focuses on the study of US and Japanese militarism and colonialism, island feminisms, and transoceanic demilitarization movements in Okinawa and the Pacific Islands. Her work has appeared, for instance, in American Quarterly, Intersections, and International Journal of Okinawan Studies. She is the editor of the Okinawan Journal of Island Studies since 2019.

Ernesto R. Gregorio Jr.

Prof. Ernesto R. Gregorio Jr. is presently an assistant professor at the University of the Philippines Manila. He served as a department chair for two terms and was seconded as a project assistant professor to the University of the Ryukyus in 2019. He graduated with a BS degree in Medical Technology, a Diploma in Applied Parasitology and Entomology, and a Master of Public Health degree. He is presently a PhD candidate at the Department of Global Health, University of the Ryukyus, Japan. Prof. Gregorio contributes to the development of public health and education leaders and professionals through engaged instruction, mentoring, and coaching of students at the College of Public Health, UP Manila and at the University of the Ryukyus. Prof. Gregorio is involved in research on gender and ethics review, communicable diseases (HIV/AIDS, the Zika virus, HPV, dengue, and COVID-19), mental health, and disaster risk reduction and management. He has published more than 30 journal articles in international peer-reviewed and indexed journals. He recently co-wrote a chapter for a book entitled Zika Virus Biology, Transmission, and Pathology, a publication by Elsevier. Prof. Gregorio serves as a public health expert for the Commission on Higher Education, Philippines.

So Hatano

So Hatano is a professor of cultural heritage management and architectural history in the Research Institute for Islands and Sustainability (RIIS) at the University of the Ryukyus. He has been conducting research projects on mines, immigrant villages, shrines, and Japanese-style houses developed in Taiwan during the Japanese colonial period. His research is mainly based on architectural historiography and methodology, but he has also used the results of his own research to determine the historical and cultural value of objects and to develop measures for their conservation, management, and utilization as cultural heritage. He has been conducting empirical scientific research through architectural historiography and then spreading the results to practical activities. His current project is to examine spatial interactions between Japan and Taiwan under colonialism through the perspective of cultural landscape study.

Daisuke Ikegami

Daisuke Ikegami is an associate professor of Western modern history in the Faculty of Global and Regional Studies at the University of the Ryukyus. He is the author of The American Pacific Strategy and International Trusteeship (original Japanese title: 「アメリカの太平洋戦略と信託統治」) (Horitsubunaka Sha, 2014), and the co-editor of The Challenges of Island Regional Science (original Japanese title: 「島嶼地域科学という挑戦」) (Border-ink, 2019). His research interests include the history of US overseas possessions, especially Guam, contemporary history of the Pacific Islands, and war memories studies.

Takashi Ito

Takashi Ito is a professor in the civil engineering program at the University of the Ryukyus. He received a PhD in geotechnical engineering from Nagoya University in 1994. He worked at the National Institute of Technology (Toyota College) as a research associate (1987–1991), then as an assistant professor (1991–1994), as an associate professor (1994–2004), and finally as a professor (2004–2018). He then became a professor at the University of the Ryukyus (2018). He is a member of ISRM (International Society for Rock Mechanics and rock engineering), JSCE (Japan Society of Civil Engineering), JGS (Japan Geotechnical Society), and JSMS (The Society of Material Science, Japan), and he received an achievement award from JGS in 2018.

Ikue Kina

Ikue Kina is a professor of American literature in the Faculty of Global and Regional Studies at the University of the Ryukyus. She is the editor of volumes 1–3 of Gender Studies in Okinawa (original Japanese title: 「沖縄ジェンダー学」) (Otsuki Shoten, 2014–16), and the translator of Tami Sakiyama's short story "Passing into Twilight Alley" (original Japanese title: 「アコウクロウ 幻視行」), and had an essay published in My Postwar Life: New Writings from Japan and Okinawa, edited by Elizabeth McKenzie (Chicago Quarterly Review Books, 2012). Her research interests include gender and ethnicity in American literature, multiethnic US communities, ecofeminism, ecocriticism, and indigenous women writers.

Jun Kobayashi

Prof. Kobayashi has more than 20 years of experience in global health and is the author of more than 120 publications in international scientific journals. He has made contributions in strengthening the capacity of infectious disease control and school health in low- and middle-income countries under the Japanese Official Development Assistance (ODA) program from the viewpoint of both a practitioner and a researcher. He received the Third Merit of Labor award from the Lao government in 1999 for making contributions in malaria control. From 2000, he joined the core membership of the Hashimoto Initiative, focusing on the importance of deworming and other infectious disease programs in schools. He made numerous contributions in human resource development for policy management in Asian and African countries. He has been a chair of the Japan Consortium for Global School Health Research (JC-GSHR), a think tank and focal point in Japan for the global promotion of school health since its inception in 2008. He is currently dean of the Graduate School of Health Sciences, University of the Ryukyus, which is the second oldest school of health sciences in Japan. He has incorporated his public health experience in Okinawa and low- and middle-income countries into our human resource development programs.

Contributors

Hui-ju Lin

Hui-ju Lin, who graduated from the Tainan National University of the Arts, currently works as a research assistant at the Gold Museum New Taipei City Government in Taiwan and has been engaged in environmental planning, community development, and other related work, and in the museum is mainly responsible for preservation and reuse of cultural heritage and curatorial and research work.

Keisuke Mori

Keisuke Mori is currently a lecturer in the Department of Economics at Senshu University. His work focuses on historical relations between governmental practices (governmentality) and social movements in Japan and Germany in the field of sociology. He is particularly interested in militarism, environmentalism, and colonial governmentality, and he has published several papers, such as “Domestic Environmental Policy and Status of Forces Agreement: US Military Presence and New Water Pollution Risk in Germany,” in Exploring Base Politics: How Host Countries Shape the Network of US Overseas Bases, edited by Shinji Kawana and Minori Takahashi (Abington and New York: Routledge, 2020) and “Connections Result in a General Upsurge of Protests: Egocentric Network Analysis of Social Movement Organizations after the Fukushima Nuclear Accident,” with Keiichi Satoh and Kimberly Wang Yang in Social Movement Studies (2020). His current project is to examine the politico-administrative process of the decontamination process of per-fluorocarbons leaked from the military bases located in Okinawa.

Asami Nago

Asami Nago is a lecturer in the Global Education Institute at the University of the Ryukyus. She holds a doctorate in anthropology from the University of Hawai‘i at Mānoa. She has conducted research in Thailand, Myanmar, the Philippines, and Okinawa.

Sejong Oh

Sejong Oh is a professor in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, University of the Ryukyus. His specialty is the study of Korean literature in Japan. He is the author of Poetics of Rhythm and Lyricism: Kim Si Jong and the Denial of Lyricism of Tanka (Seikatsu Shoin, 2010) and Between Okinawa and Korea: History and Narrative on the “Visibility/in-Visibility” of Koreans (Akashi Shoten, 2019).

Syota Tanno

Syota Tanno, PhD, is an associate professor at the University of the Ryukyus. His research interests are on displaced aggression, teaching, and learning in educational psychology. He studied displaced aggression and triggered displaced aggression as a research fellow at the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science (DC1) and published the book The Effects of Interpersonal Relationships on Triggered Displaced Aggression (Kazama Shobo, 2012). He gradually shifted to studying teaching and learning and is currently studying homework assignments in elementary school.

Naohiko Tokashiki

Naohiko Tokashiki was an associate professor at the University of the Ryukyus until 2013 and is currently the director of the Okinawa Rock Engineering Research Institute. He worked at the US Army Okinawa district engineer corps in structural design (1970–1972), was a research associate at Nagoya University (1977–1979), and then joined the University of the Ryukyus. He received his PhD in science and engineering from Waseda University in 2011. His research theme is engineering issues related to the geology of Okinawa.

Atsushi Toriyama

Atsushi Toriyama is a professor in the Research Institute for Islands and Sustainability at the University of the Ryukyus. He has published in the area of modern Okinawa, including Okinawa: The Origins of Military Base Society and its Conflict with the US, 1945–56 (original Japanese title: 「沖縄 基地社会の起源と相克1945–1956」) (Keiso Shobo, 2013). His work focuses on the relationship between military bases and area residents in Okinawa.

Kaishi Yamagiwa

Kaishi Yamagiwa is a lecturer in the Research Institute for Islands and Sustainability at the University of the Ryukyus. His research interest includes prehistoric archaeology and early human cultural adaptation for island regions. His recent work is excavation surveys and analysis of material culture in the Ryukyu Islands, Taiwan, the Philippines, and Micronesia. In recent years, he has also published various research results using chemical analysis (using X-Ray), and he is involved in human history research projects in collaboration with linguists, anthropologists, and population geneticists.

Kinuko Maehara Yamazato

Kinuko Maehara Yamazato is an associate professor of American Studies at the University of the Ryukyus. Her work, which includes conducting life story interviews with people in Okinawa and Okinawan diasporic communities, looks at their life experiences to explore the impacts of the Pacific War and the US military's occupation and continued presence on their identity construction. Her works explore how these life stories reveal their views of their own lives and of their relationship with Okinawa, Japan, and the United States. She has published several book chapters: "Encountering National and Gendered Selves: Identity Formation of Okinawan Students in the United States during the US Occupation of Okinawa," in Gender, Power, and Military Occupations: Asia Pacific and the Middle East since 1945 (Routledge, 2012); and a chapter on Okinawan diasporic identities based on life stories from Okinawan "Kibei Nisei" in Hawai'i in Uchinaanchu Diaspora: Memories, Continuities, and Constructions (University of Hawai'i Press, 2008).